The language of gestures

Telephone Division

■ To those seeking an inexpensive yet fascinating hobby, I recommend Telephone Watching. I've been doing it for years, and I don't find it time and a trifle for notepaper. I watch for gestures, and I don't fool away my time with male telephone users. The only gesture they use is hammering. This is dull. Also, too. Women, on the other hand, are subtle:

You don't TELL me! This gesture is accomplished by thrusting out the right, or free, arm and extending each of the fingers gracefully.

And she actually had the NERVE—1 Second phase of the gesture above, done by closing fingers quickly and pumping arm up and down.

Now, isn't that just like her? Right arm akimbo, at sharp angle from right hip.

Listen—wait! I hear this! Right hand, fingers extended, planted suddenly against V of neckline.

Hm-m-m! Right thumb and forefinger clamped on lobe of right ear.

Yes... I thought everybody had a fairly good time here, dear. Right hand casually pats collar.

Well, I certainly told him! Right arm and forefinger extended in rapid up-and-down motion.

The most cringe little dress!!! Telephone receiver temporarily held against shoulder by chin, both arms extended at sides in a wild flinging, presumably of money.

—KEN KRAFT

SEVEN SCORE AND 10: Frank Anderson's cover celebrates Abraham Lincoln's 160th birthday by encapsulating his career: There's the backwoods boy and his log cabin; the rail splitter; the raft on which he went down the Mississippi; the circuit lawyer; a campaign ribbon and torchlight parade to mark his running for the Presidency; the capitol—with its dome unfinished in the war years; the drums of war; the chained wrists of a slave; and—in his own hand—a copy of his "few appropriate remarks" at Gettysburg. What a life in that capsule!
